Background

Building a persuasive business case for the continued investment in Staff Learning and Development, in light of the University's near term fiscal crises and the longer term emphasis on administrative efficiency, is one of the primary reasons for the creation of the UC Learning and Development Consortium. At its first meeting on January 13 and 14, 2011, Consortium representatives acting on a stated priority of the Consortium undertook the drafting of a list of competencies which should be included in the UC Core Competency Model.

The purpose of the UC Core Competency Model is to serve as a foundational tool for the assessment and development of staff, managers and leaders at the University of California. Broader applications for the Core Competency Model are intended to include the following process areas:

- Employment including job descriptions, job postings, interviewing and selection
- Compensation including position classification and job family design
- Performance Management
- Career Development
- Succession Management

This Competency Model is intended to describe target, expected or satisfactory performance behaviors at the University of California, where seeking excellence in mission accomplishment is the standard. Additionally, the core competencies described in this model are expected to be accomplished in all employee roles in the University to some degree. Those in the role of Manager have an additional competency for which they are accountable.

The Competency Model is intended to serve as a dictionary or compendium to define the "What" as processes and programs in employment, compensation, learning and development are designed, implemented and assessed for effectiveness. The "How" of incorporating the Competency Model in to specific location and systemwide talent management efforts will be designed into the next phases of the Consortium's work? The "Why" a person has or has not attained a certain level of proficiency in the Competency Model is a process step in subsequent program assessments and performance evaluations. The Consortium, in developing the descriptors and behavior indicators contained in this Competency Model, has deliberately tried to be broad and inclusive of the existing work on Core Competencies that has been developed at several UC locations.

This final Core Competency Model Discussion Draft was developed for review and discussion with the CHROs at their January and May 2011 Meetings. Further editing and discussion has taken place during Consortium meetings and teleconference calls in the interim. Special thanks to the Consortium volunteer "Thomas Jeffersons", who participated in the final editing discussions of this document.
